

Picture 1 - A man eats at On the Edge Restaurant. This picturesque eatery is located on the Stony Point nature reserve, famous for its penguin colony. The business is an example of the social and environmental responsibility that is expected of every participant in the Tourism Recovery Programme.

Picture 2 - A saleswoman sells crafts to a tourist at Nubian Eco Village. This Aswan-based business works closely with the local Nubian communities to provide economic opportunities to artisans by connecting them with tourists. The Tourism Recovery Programme intends to recruit up to 100 Tunisian businesses that have a similar impact in local communities or environment.

Picture 3 - Head Chef Ammaarah Petersen stands in front of her restaurant, Cape Malay House. This eatery provides South African customers a window into Malaysian cuisine. The business exemplifies the diverse backgrounds of the participants of the Tourism Recovery Programme

Picture 4 - Kamaroutes Travel Designers is a black- and female-owned travel agency offering tailor-made experiences within South Africa. Unemployment rate in South Africa is over 30%, which is why this business decided to employ graduates and train them to give them a better chance to get employed. This focus on social responsibility is a common characteristic among the participants of the Tourism Recovery Programme.
